To whom it may concern,

Alex has been a student on mine at KU Edwards Campus Data Analytics Bootcamp. Over the course of the the past 6 months, I've had the pleasure of working with him. He has shown himself to an extremely quick learner and his ability to grasp new concepts has been very admirable.

The quality of his classwork and team projects has been top notch and he proved to be an invaluable resource to the project teams that he worked on. He was always there to help other students and he never shied away from asking questions when he didn't know the answer or needed guidance.

Due to his strong technical aptitude, willingness to learn and take on new challenges, as well as his ability to delegate and work with a team, I think that he would be a valuable asset to any team that he would join.

One thing that really stuck out to me, is that even though he would have a working solution to a problem, he would always want to know if it was the best solution and how it could be made better or how it could be modified to follow best practices.

Please feel free to contact me with any questions that you may have.
